

COG announces staffing changes within Joint Projects & Services line of business

TORONTO -- COG's Joint Projects & Services (JP&S) Program Manager Paul Lafreniere has announced his plan to retire from the organization effective February 2020. He has agreed to continue to support various COG initiatives, in a part-time capacity, such as: benchmarking activities, member Q&As and act as a senior advisor supporting JP&S.

Paul has played an invaluable role at COG since he joined in January 2007. His wealth of experience has enabled him to be a strategic leader and thinker while managing a multimillion-dollar project portfolio. Paul's dedication and passion for his work are evident to anyone he collaborates with and he has always demonstrated a willingness to help those who have sought his guidance.

His commitment to always delivering the highest level of service to our members is one of his trademarks. Paul has also worked diligently to manage COG projects effectively and to provide project participants with valuable deliverables while identifying cost savings.

Ian Cruchley, who joined COG late in 2019 from Bruce Power, has been working with Paul and will assume the program manager role once the transition is complete.
